About the Ann Arbor Film Festival

The Ann Arbor Film Festival is a showcase for the most creative and unique films of today's preeminent moving image artists who cross boundaries, defy expectations, and experiment with concepts and techniques. Founded in 1963, the AAFF is one of the oldest avant-garde film festivals in North America and one of the most highly regarded forums in the world for film as an art form.

Our 6-day event presents an artist-friendly atmosphere at the historic Michigan Theater. Film enthusiasts, filmmakers, programmers, curators, and distributors from far and near convene each year in Ann Arbor to engage with contemporary film art.

In addition, the AAFF pioneered the traveling film festival concept in 1964 and continues to screen select shorts from each year's festival at more than 35 cities in the U.S. and abroad. Participating filmmakers, who are paid for each screening of their work, and receive increased visibility throughout the year.
